

Linking Systems of Care for Children and Youth Demonstration Project

Organizational Chart

Who?

The Office for Victims of Crime works to provide leadership and enhance the Nation's capacity to assist crime victims in ways that will promote justice and healing for all victims. OVC distributes federal program funds, offers trainings, supports national projects, and hosts programs to help raise awareness about victims' rights and services to the public.

What?

OVC provides funding for the demonstration grantees and has provided NIJ with the funding to evaluate the demonstration effort. OVC also provides grantees with ongoing guidance and direction, as well as reviews and approves project plans and documents.

Who?

The National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges works to improve the lives of children and families who seek justice. NCJFCJ has provided TTA for initiatives involving multiple organizations and spanning a wide range of topics.

What?

NCJFCJ is providing training and technical assistance to the two demonstration sites. NCJFCJ will help the grantees establish their networks, design and implement the needs assessments/gap analyses, and develop and implement the service delivery strategy. It will also convene a National Steering Committee to share information, coordinate TTA, and develop materials to assist in future replication efforts.

Who?

OVC funded four demonstration projects in Illinois, Ohio, Montana, and Virginia which include grantees and their partners. They are working to develop a consistent and coordinated approach to effectively identify, assess, and provide comprehensive services to youth victims and their families.

What?

Each grantee's network will develop replicable and sustainable statewide system of care frameworks to identify and serve youth victims and their families. They will identify the state's service needs through needs assessments/gap analyses and then design and implement new strategies based on systems of care frameworks.
